

Shola Kaye long bio

Shola Kaye is a communications coach and keynote speaker whose work has appeared in the BBC, Harper's Bazaar, Marie Claire and Forbes.

She studied Natural Sciences at Cambridge University before achieving a Masters in Neuropharmacology and Analytical Chemistry.

She spent part of her career working in consulting in the USA before returning to the UK. Here she was overcome by a crippling fear of speaking up at work. She left her corporate job and went on a personal development journey which eventually led her to become a professional singer.

Shola has performed on four continents. She now speaks to and trains Corporates, particularly STEM companies, and Employee Resource Groups, helping them create impactful, confident and exciting presentations that win business and make an impact.

She also believes that in this fast-paced, technological era, it's more important than ever to have strong skills in communication, particularly persuasion and storytelling. And for anyone working in a technical area, it's vital to use devices such as analogy and metaphor to be understood.

Her mission is for people to realise that they don't have to have be naturally confident speakers to build their careers and become leaders using engaging and transformational speaking as a tool.

Shola is author of the book 'How to be a D.I.V.A. at Public Speaking'. Her new book 'Speak Up on the Spot' will be out soon.

Shola Kaye short bio

Shola Kaye is a keynote speaker, communications coach, author of two books and a professional performer. She works with corporates and speaks at conferences, showing how to communicate with power and create impactful, confident and exciting presentations that win business and make an impact. Her work has appeared in Forbes, Harper's Bazaar and on BBC radio.